Mary Jackson Marvel House

c. 1910

One of the most substantial dwellings erected in the Camden neighborhood during the early twentieth century is the two-and-a-half story Queen Anne brick house that stands near the corner of Camden Avenue and Newton Street. Estimated to date around 1910, the yellowish-brown brick residence is associated with Mary Jackson Marvel, a daughter of William H. Jackson. William H. Jackson, U. S. Congressman and part owner of the Jackson Brothers Lumber Company, purchased this property in April 1905 for $1,000. Although the purchase price was a significant one of the time, the sum is not sufficient to include the value a prominent improvement. William H. Jackson resided in a large Victorian mansion located on the west side of Camden Avenue on the current site of the St. Francis de Sales School. This Newton Street property remained in William H. Jackson's name until November 1914 when he and his wife Jennie devised ownership to Mary Jackson Marvel. Mary Jackson Marvel and her husband Josiah held onto the house and lot for six additional years. The couple sold the property in 1920 to Alpine H. Graham for $6,500. For the following thirty-one years the yellowish-brown Victorian house remained under Alpine Graham's ownership.

One of the many dwellings erected by the Jackson family in the Camden neighborhood, the Mary Jackson Marvel house follows popular architectural traditions for the turn of the century with its asymmetrical Queen Anne design incorporating Victorian as well as Colonial Revival features.

Prepare both a one paragraph summary and a comprehensive description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Mary Jackson Marvel house is located at 319 Newton Street in the Camden Historic District of Salisbury, Wicomico County, Maryland. The two-and-a-half story Queen Anne style brick dwelling is supported on a raised foundation, and the yellowish-brown brick house is covered by a steeply pitched hip roof sheathed with slate. The house faces southwest.

Built around 1910, the two-and-a-half story Queen Anne brick dwelling follows an asymmetrical plan with a side entrance and a three-story round tower dominating the southwest corner. The walls are laid in a finely pressed brick with a narrow mortar joint. Two-and-a-half story pavilions project from the sides of the house providing uneven elevations.

The southwest (main) elevation is an asymmetrical facade with a side entrance and adjacent single-pane sash windows sheltered by a single-story, shed-roofed porch. Paired half-length Tuscan columns rest on brick plinths topped by brownstone caps. A set of brick and concrete steps lead up to the front porch, and the sides of the brick steps feature brownstone caps as well. The ends of the porch are enclosed with a triangular shaped tympanum sheathed with fishscale shingles. The single-pane sash windows as well as the partially glazed front door are topped by a jack arch. Fixed atop the porch roof on the southeast corner is a cross gable sheathed with fishscale shingles and pierced by a single-pane attic window. The three-story round tower on the southwest corner is pierced by single-pane sash windows on each floor, and each opening is spanned by a jack arch. Between the second and third floor levels is a brownstone beltcourse. The tower is capped by a conical slate roof.

The east elevation is an asymmetrical facade with a projecting two-and-a-half story pavilion defined by pairs of single-pane sash windows. The pavilion is topped by an enclosed pediment covered with fishscale shingles as well. Fixed to the left (south) of the pavilion is a small window filled with a diamond-pane casement window that lights the staircase. A two-and-a-half story gable roof pavilion marks the west side of the house as well.

The house has been divided into multiple apartments. The interior was not seen.
